Dress Goods Sponged Free

All wool dress goods should be sponged before making up. We have two pieces of Fancy Dress Goods where we have had but one before. Price influenced our purchase and we expect that price will have something to do with selling it. We thought of this when we priced these Dress Goods.

Dress Goods

The only way that a reduction in price helps us is that the trade will buy more goods at eighty-seven cents than at one dollar, when the style and quality are the same.

When we say fifty-cent Dress Goods, we mean new style in latest colors and all wool. Good enough for any ordinary wear. Especially good for misses' whole costumes. When these are sponged free you are getting something for nothing.

Our new fancies at eighty-seven cents are one dollar goods of the very highest type, and sponging free saves you five cents per yard more.

Black Cat Hosiery will not satisfy every one, but the minority is very small. Our Winter numbers are exceptionally good.

Dress Goods

New style Dresses are taking new kinds of Dress Goods very freely. We would not advertise Dress Goods so often if we did not think that we had the goods wanted for these new dress ideas.

We have a fifty-inch cloth at $1.35 that is attracting best buyers. A part of these cloths are $1.50 and some are $1.75 values. Better see them.

The small cloth is a Green Autumn Cord, very wide, at $1.50 per yard.

No matter how hard we push colored Dress Goods, we never for a minute lose sight of our Black Dress Goods value and just now we can do you some good with our special prices.

Winter Underwear

While this Dress Goods sale is on we want to call your attention to our kind of Winter Underwear, such as:

Double fleeceed Jaeger Underwear for children at 25c each size and children's Bennington Wool starts at 30c. These are as good as can be had at our prices. These same kinds in boys' at same prices.

Bennington Wool Underwear for ladies, also Munsing in both cotton and wool in single pieces at 50c and $1.00.

Munsing Union Suits made to fit the whole family, and while they are of the best made, they are as low priced as any ordinary kind. Children's Union Suits 50c and $1.00. Ladies' $1.00 to $3.00. See them in our window.

A Tax-Paying World.

Americans who are discussing the extent to which the federal corporation tax will, and the proposed income tax may, trench upon the revenue resources of the several states, may derive consolation from the reflection that the citizens of almost every other great nation in the world have the same question pressing home upon them. The British taxpayers with a heavy national budget ahead of them, whatever may be the action of the House of Lords, may well speculate as to what margin of revenue will be left for local requirements when the cost of administering the imperial government and of building a fleet of dreadnoughts is provided for.

In France the minister of finance is carefully considering how far into the regions of local revenue he can push the demands of the national treasury in the new financial scheme he has under consideration. Not many months ago Germany face a new project for raising imperial revenue which, as outlined, threatened the resources of many of the defeated states. A compromise was effected, and as one of its incidents possibly, apparently as one of its results, came the change in the chancellorship, for while more conspicuous events seemed to have compelled Von Buelow to retire from office the dissatisfaction with his administration which has long manifested itself in many quarters was greatly intensified by his demands that artificial light and electric development should contribute largely to the imperial treasury.

In all the countries mentioned, in the United States as well as others, local progress is largely responsible for the increasing demand on the patience and purses of tax-payers. By far the greatest part of the money expended for public purposes goes to the utilities of communities as distinct from the requirements of the nation. What Great Britain pays to tax collectors of all kinds is pretty evenly divided between national and local requirements. The British national debt, roughly estimated at about $3,345,000,000, while the aggregate of municipal indebtedness falls only $700,000,000 behind. First and last, it is a conservative estimate that national and local taxation in Great Britain annually exact $1,605,000,000 from the people.

The present intense agitation in Great Britain in regard to the budget is in no small degree due to the feeling of the average British taxpayer that, while the end of this era of burdensome collection is by no means in sight, the pressure of communities for improvement and development becomes more and more insistent, contemporaneously with the growing requirements of imperial policy. There, as here, some arrangement remains to be worked out by which a well-defined barrier shall be raised between areas open to the respective taxation requirements. In the defeated states, however, there is not the constitutional question intervening to complicate the consideration of where and when the barrier can be raised.—Boston Transcript.

Why She Wept.

Mr. Styles—What are you crying about, dear?

Mrs. Styles—I'm crying because I didn't spend that $20 you gave me this morning.

Mr. Styles—Well, you shouldn't cry about that. You're better off not to have spent it.

Mrs. Styles—No, I'm not, either. I lost it!—Yonkers Statesman.
